

BARGAINS IN CHILDREN'S COATS

Ages 6 to 14 Years.

Our determination to reduce this stock at once makes the cut in prices seem almost ridiculous. True to an old policy of this store every garment is marked from its original price—not marked up to make the marked price seem smaller by comparison. If its a coat your child needs don't miss this opportunity.

And the prices we have put on them is lower than the usual end of the season mark. Bearcloth, Plush, Astrachan and Velvet. If Daniel Sully had been cut out of "The Golden Rule," presented at the opera house last evening, there wouldn't have been much left to the piece. In his favorite part of priest, Sully was right at home and helped to hold the thing together. The play didn't attract much of an audience.

Bargains! The dainty articles to be found on the bargain counters of the Congregational Ladies' Aid society are actually bargains. They include notions that were obtained from an arts and crafts shop in a quaint old Massachusetts town. They will make most acceptable Christmas gifts. Congregational vestry, Friday, Dec. 6, afternoon and evening.

From all accounts, it would seem impossible to overestimate the high character of the production of "Coming Thro' the Rye," which will be seen for the first time here at the opera house tonight. It is a musical comedy in the presentation of which the limit of extravagance appears to have been reached. There are fifty people employed in the performance, made up of comedians, singers and dancers, who have won distinction in their respective lines of work, and the scenic and costume display is described as massive and beautiful. Two sixty-foot cars are required to transport the equipment, from which some idea of its immensity may be gathered. The comedy of the piece is said to be wholesome, clean-cut and of the kind which keeps the audience constantly convulsed with laughter, while the musical score is described as unusually melodious, jingling and "catchy." Outside of the shop, the program specified upwards of twenty numbers which are said to become quickly popular. This is the kind of entertainment which commands the attention of all who enjoy the best in stage performance and if it receives the patronage here which it deserves, and which has been bestowed upon it elsewhere, it will be witnessed by an audience limited in size only by the capacity of the theatre.
